Lease, bonds approved for school projects

BY BOB DEMAREE

Two major projects for Madison Consolidated Schools took another step forward Wednesday night with approval of lease and bond agreements by the Building Corporation and Madison school board.

In May, the school board unanimously approved a resolution to build an addition onto the west side of Anderson Elementary School and another to develop solar efficiencies throughout the school corporation, mostly at Madison Conslidated High School. The two projects are being financed by a single $8 million bond.

On Wednesday, Building Corporation members John Schutte, Rhonda Sauley and

Masks required on buses, may be used in flu outbreaks

BY BOB DEMAREE

The start of a new school year is just weeks away, and Madison Consolidated Schools Superintendent Dr. Jeffery Studebaker said at Wednesday's school board meeting that the school corporation once again will be taking precautions for COVID-19.

"We're hopeful that we have the bulk of it behind us, but I anticipate we will have issues. It's still here," he said.

"We reserve the right to fully mask if we need to," he said, especially if there begins to be an increase in COVID-19 cases locally. Studebaker also said that a high rate of flu cases might also trigger the use of face masks based on the corporations experience wearing the masks last year.

Studebaker pointed out that during the 2020-2021 school

Strip mall proposed for former bowling alley site

BY MARK CAMPBELL

The vacant site of a former bowling alley on Madison's hilltop will be developed into a 5,800-square-foot strip mall under a proposal approved by the Madison Plan Commission this week.

The applicants, property owners Vivian McIntosh-Gregory and Ron Gregory, asked for and received Plan Commission approval to proceed with construction of a mixed-use retail center that will serve up to five businesses on a footprint somewhat smaller than the site formerly occupied by Ten Pin Alley, 192 Clifty Drive.

The bowling center, heavily damaged by a tornado in May 2017, was demolished and the

ABUSE

Madison Police Detective Jeremey Perkins, the lead investigator, arrested Dalton L. Duncil, 28, of Madison, on preliminary charges of Neglect of a Dependent-Child Violations, a Level 3 felony; Battery-Serious Bodily Injury, a Level 5 felony; and Possession of a Syringe, a Level 6 felony

Detectives executed a search warrant at a West Fourth Street address where it is alleged that the injuries occurred. The investigation determined that Duncil is the stepfather of the child and the injuries occurred while the child was in his care.

Duncil is being held without bond at the Jefferson County jail .

On Wednesday, Eddie T. Gray, 47, Madison, and Rebecca R. Rice, 43, Madison, were arrested on narcotic-related charges following execution of a search warrant in the 1800 block of Meridian Street in which Madison Police located methamphetamine, drug paraphernalia and dozens of "loaded" syringes believed to contain methamphetamine.

Additionally, Gray was charged with theft after Madison Police investigated the theft of a U-Haul car dolly from the 300 block of East Main Street. The stolen trailer, which had already been spray painted, was located adjacent to a Meridian Street residence frequented by Gray, Madison City Police said.

The investigation into the drug activity was led by Patrolmen Jared Sweet, Cameron Blankenship and Trent Smith.

Also on Wednesday, Alexander Nicholas Barnes, 29, Madison, was charged with theft, a Class A misdemeanor; unlawful entry into a vehicle, a Class B misdemeanor; and residential entry, a Level 6 felony.

Officers Josh Nolan and Curtis Shelpman responded to a report of theft from a vehicle in the 600 block of West Main Street. After obtaining a description of the subject, Barnes was located in the basement of a residence in the 700 block of West Main Street. Barnes did not live at the address in which he was located, resulting in the residential entry charge.

The property stolen from the vehicle was recovered by officers.

year, Madison's "flu cases were next to zero," and he thinks safety precautions related to COVID-19 helped make that possible. "If there is a flu outbreak in the county, we may ask to go back to masks," he said.

The school corporation will also continue its efforts to thoroughly surface clean throughout all school buildings.

Due to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recommendations, face masks will be required on school buses. "We have no choice," Studebaker noted. "If they ride a school bus, they must mask the entire the time," which includes not just getting to and from school, but athletic events and all other activities in which students will be riding a bus.

Studebaker said masks will be available on buses and be provided to students who may not have one when getting on. "We have a huge supply of masks and will continue to do that," Studebaker said. "We will not leave a kid on the curb."

In other business, the board:

• Approved the appropriation of $126,405 for correcting drainage issues at Gary O'Neal Field by Turfdogs Lawn and Landscape of Indianapolis.

Studebaker said there are issues of standing water between second and third base on the inflield, along with rightfield that are making it impossible to practice on the baseball field.

Madison head baseball coach Tim Armstrong said nothing has been done to the field's irrigation system since 2004, and that there are severe drainage issues.

Studebaker said he had reviewed the situation earlier in the week, and he characterized the area as a "swamp" that he "almost lost a shoe." He said the process of correcting the drainage problems will involve removing all of the sod and playing surface to then more effectively direct where water goes.

Studebaker said there is also a drainage issue due to erosion on Lady Cub Softball Field which will cost $14,000 to correct and also be done by Turfdogs, but noted that expenditure did not require board approval.

• Heard a report from Jill Mires, principal of Rykers' Ridge Elementary School in which she announced the school has received a Family Friendly School Designation, which is given to schools that excel in the involvement of families and communities in the education of their children.

Mires also gave an update on Rykers' continued status as a Lighthouse school in the Leader in Me program. Rykers' Ridge began participating in the Leader in Me program in 2013 and achieved Lighthouse status in 2018. The Leader in Me utilizes Franklin Covey's "The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People," and emphasizes community partnerships and strong relationships with families.

Amana Bingham and Jordan White are the co-coordinators of the Leader in Me program at Rykers' Ridge. Bingham noted they are continually looking for ways to improve over what they did the year before. "We're doing new programs every year," which involves contributing to organizations in the community. White said it's exciting what's happening at Rykers' Ridge as students do service while also learning. "We invite visitors into our building to see what Rykers' Ridge is all about," she said.

• Authorized Studebaker to hire employees if the need arises before the next meeting with the board's official approval at the next meeting in August.

Studebaker said there remain positions to be filled for the upcoming school year. "We're not adding positions. We're replacing folks who have resigned," he said, citing one position at the high school, two at the junior high, and two preschool positions. Studebaker said it's difficult to find teachers in July, and that by allowing him to hire teachers, it allows new hires "to resign positions and for us to have them in time for school to start."

• Accepted a donation from Johnson-Melloh Solutions of three solar wagons (valued at $2,100 each) to help students better learn about solar energy. Craig Martin, vice president of business development for Johnson-Melloh, said laptops can be plugged into the solar wagons and receive power to operate directly off of them. "They provide instant learning and generate a lot of discussion," Martin said.

Board member David Storie said the solar wagons could also be great for adults to better comprehend what solar energy does.

"Solar is a misunderstood technology," said Martin, and the solar wagons "bring it to a grassroots level, making them a great learning tool."

• Approved a contract agreement with Indiana School of the Blind and Vision Impaired to meet student needs for evaluation and services, and to maintain compliance with Indiana Education Plans. "These are very important for us to be involved," said board member Larry Henry, who has observed the need for it.

• Approved acceptance of the Carl D. Perkins Title V Grant for $61,737 to be used to continue to upgrade Career and Technology Education programs including Culinary, Engineering, Agriculture, Manufacturing, Graphics and Business.

• Approved the hiring of Lee Strassell as a math teacher at Madison Consolidated High School for the 2021-2022 school year, Christopher Fisher as a CARES team social worker at Madison Junior High School, and Rebecca Thorpe as a preschool teacher at Anderson Elementary School, both effective Aug. 1. Resignations were accepted by Adam Stotts as MCHS English teacher and Rachel Otto as CARES team social worker.

site cleared in August 2018. The property has sat vacant since then until the Gregorys opted to develop the site, zoned for general business, into retail space. Based on plans for the strip mall, all five storefronts will face Clifty Drive and parking will be at the front of the buildings. The Plan Commission also approved a Handicapped Parking Plan that will include three ADA accessible spaces along with 58 standard parking spaces at the site.

In other applications, the Plan Commission:

• Approved requested setback changes to allow construction of a pole barn storage structure at Cruisin Inc., 2720 Clifty Drive.

• Approved a petition by Kevin and Miranda McBride to amend a final plat to combine 645 and 651 Twin Falls Drive, zoned Low Density Residential.

Lindsay Hunt-Greves adopted a resolution approving the form of lease agreement, and another resolution approving issuance of bonds.

The school board then adopted resolutions authorizing the execution of the lease, the additional appropriation of $8 million and the approval of contracts after bids are received. The board also approved a disclosure requirement that is necessary any time the school corporation takes on new debt.

Bonnie Hensler, director of Finance and Human Resources, expects the closing of the bonds to occur Sept. 1 when the school corporation should receive the money for the projects.

Understanding The Fees Associated With Annuities

"Retirees say they would rather die than run out of money! Not so fast! Annuities provide income for life." Stephen Dybwad

Layin' It on the Line

By Stephen Dybwad
Retirement Planning/
Wealth Management

The retirement landscape has changed, and more and more investors are beginning to realize the importance of guaranteed income for life. As a result, there has been a lot of attention placed on annuities recently. Annuities can be one of the most misunderstood investments out there!! What are the different types? Do annuities have fees? Do I lose control of my money? And the list goes on and on? However, whether it be a traditional stock market portfolio or another type of insurance product, Fees are always a hot topic. Let's focus primarily on the types of fees associated with the different types of annuities.

We will focus on the more popular types of Annuities: Immediate, Fixed, Fixed-Index and Variable.

Immediate: An immediate annuity works a lot like a traditional company-sponsored "pension" plan. You deposit a lump sum of money in exchange for a guaranteed income payment for life or for a specific "period" of time. That period could be 5, 10, 15, 20, or 25 years in most cases. There are no direct fees to the consumer here, but there are some limitations. The agent gets paid directly from the issuing Insurance co. These types of annuities usually start paying out immediately, hence the name "immediate" annuity. This annuity, by design, is a straightforward product; that's why there are no fees, and the compensation to the agent is minimal.

Fixed: Fixed annuities work just like bank-issued CDs. They pay a "fixed" rate for a specific period, either 2, 3, 5, or 7 years. You get a fixed guaranteed rate for the "term," once the term ends, your principal is returned with the interest that accrued over the past years. Some of these accounts allow you to withdraw the interest every year. The agent gets paid a minimal amount, again, as these are simple accounts by design.

Fixed-Index: A Fixed-Index Annuity (FIA) is a bit more complex than the first two options. Fixed-Index Annuities earn their interest or "growth" from the performance of an underlying equity index. You "participate" in the "upside" growth of that index but not the downside. So, If the index closes "down" from the previous year, you don't go "backward"; you just don't earn interest that year. At least you didn't suffer any losses! The floor is always zero "0". These types have "riders" you can purchase, which come with a fee. These "riders" are unnecessary, but they offer some significant benefits for a small annual fee. The issuing Insurance company compensates the agent, and the total fees, including some or even all these rider benefits, may vary from .5-2%.

Variable: The Variable Annuity happens to have the most fees. In some cases, you can see fees as high as 3-4%! This type of annuity is classified as security. Its principal is not protected and is subject to "market" volatility. That means you CAN lose value in this type of account. Certain riders can be purchased (for a fee), as we will discuss here. The "Variable" annuity comes with a "prospectus," like traditional stock (equity) investments. Here you can find a full breakdown of all the fees associated with this type of account.

Here is a list of the fees most common with a "variable" annuity:

The six most common fees you will find are Mortality Expense (M&E), Administrative, Investment Expense Ratio, Income rider, Death Benefit rider, and lastly, the annual fee paid to the Agent/Advisor. These fees could add up to a whopping 3-4% annually in some cases! So here, you would have to earn 3-4% consistently just to stay even! Take withdrawals or any "market" corrections into consideration, and you may find yourself losing significant value over time.

Now that you know what types of fees are associated with each type of annuity, it is imperative you ask questions and do your homework! It's best to consult with a highly qualified agent who is fully aware of what options are available and can dissect all the fees associated with the account you are considering. Each of these annuities provides very specific benefits, so know exactly what your needs and goals are before you commit.

Ignore the gossip

Dear Annie: I live in a small town. My mother died a couple of years ago, and around that same time, a friend of mine had just lost his home and was looking for someplace to live. So, I told him he could move in with me and help pay the bills. It's been a good arrangement for us both. But I recently learned that people have been spreading rumors that I'm gay — which I'm not. I date women, although I'm currently single. (I had my heart broken last year, and I've been hesitant to date again.) What should I do about this gossip? — Mischaracterized

Dear Mischaracterized: These folks must be pretty bored to sit at home making up stories about you. It brings to mind a saying commonly attributed to Eleanor Roosevelt: "Great minds discuss ideas. Average minds discuss events. Small minds discuss people." My advice to you is to keep living your life; let the small minds waste theirs. Focus on mending that broken heart.

Dear Annie: I think your advice to "Helpless Husband" — and to anyone who lives or has lived with someone in active addiction — was spot on. I would like to add that it is incredibly helpful to find a group that has a "beginners meeting" in addition to the regular Al-Anon Family Group meeting.

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

I tried several different meetings, but I never seemed to understand what was going on. Everyone was friendly and familiar with one another, and even though they were very welcoming, I felt a bit out of place, and I stopped going. It wasn't until I was referred to an Al-Anon Family Group that had a beginners meeting alongside their regular meeting that I finally felt comfortable. Being with other "beginners" was super helpful because we were all learning about the program, and when we finally joined the larger group, we could follow along and actively participate. My group recommends six beginner meetings. (During our lockdown-era weekly Zoom meetings, because we couldn't really leave and go into another room for a beginner meeting, several members would stay on at the end to have a smaller beginners meeting for any newcomers who wished to stay on the call.)

I would also like to add that each meeting has its own personality, and it may take going to a few different groups before you find your tribe; please don't give up! I have been with my group for two years now, and I can honestly say working with the Al-Anon program has changed my life in ways I could have never imagined. I thank my lucky stars for these people and this program every day. — Grateful Member

Dear Grateful: I will gladly take any chance I can to recommend Al-Anon. It truly is a wonderful program, and I hope your firsthand testimonial encourages others to give it a try. Meeting details, including for telephone and virtual meetings, are available at https://www.al-anon.org.

Is moving states unfair to our daughter?

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: We recently moved from our home of 20 years to a neighboring state that is two hours away by car. Our children are 21 and 19. We had set our sights on moving to this community several years ago, but we waited until our son had graduated from high school.

Ever since we moved here 10 months ago, our daughter has been miserable, saying we ripped her away from her home and friends, implying that we were selfish for moving before she graduates from college and is able to live on her own back in her home state.

We live in a highly rated community with wonderful amenities, and we plan to retire here. Our community is not age-restricted, but the age of its full-time residents does skew toward the older side, so I do sympathize with her that making new friends can be challenging, especially since she is only here for summer and holiday breaks. Also, the area outside our community is fairly rural, whereas our former home was in the suburbs, where shops and restaurants were more plentiful and accessible.

To elaborate on why we moved, here are some of the reasons: The tax savings were significant; we prefer the weather; it's less congested; and we love the benefits this community offers, such as living by a lake and golf course.

But I'm beginning to question whether we were in fact selfish for moving here at the time that we did rather than waiting until our kids are able to live on their own. Should this really have been more of a whole-family decision, and should we have stayed where we were longer, for our kids' sakes? — Whose Life Is It Anyway?

Dear Whose Life Is It Anyway: The short answer is that it is your life. But as you know, once you are a parent, your life and happiness often revolves around your children's lives. Even college-aged children do thrive when their home lives are predictable and stable. So, it is understandable that your daughter is feeling the way she feels. Try and be sympathetic to her, and maybe make a week or so vacation in your old hometown each summer so she gets to see her old friends.

Madison football hits the field for first time

BY THE COURIER STAFF

Madison's football team got its first taste of action on Thursday, welcoming Scottsburg, West Washington and Batesville to Cub Field for a four-team scrimmage.

The controlled scrimmage, which featured players in pads and helmets but involved no tackling, allowed coaches to get a look at their teams three weeks before official practice starts.

The field was divided in half allowing for two scrimmages to take place at the same time. The three-hour scrimmage gave all four teams a chance to a get a close look at their varsity and junior varsity squads.

Madison faced off against Scottsburg first with the varsity defense keeping the Warriors out of the end zone while getting an interception. The varsity offense scored on their series on a touchdown pass from Kaden Oliver to Colin Yancey.

The Cubs then played West Washington and Batesville to wrap up the evening.

"I thought last night went really well. Due to inclement weather the last few weeks, we weren't sure what to expect," Madison head coach Leroy Wilson said. "The team has been working hard this summer. Now it is on to the Training Camp next week that will end with our final scrimmage of the summer at Charlestown."

Madison will play in another scrimmage on Saturday, July 24, at Charlestown starting at 9 a.m. The Cubs then will take a week off for their youth football camp July 27-29. Official practice begins Aug. 2.

This season will mark Madison's first since leaving the Hoosier Hills Conference, the league the school helped found in 1972. While the Cubs will still play three HHC opponents, this season's schedule will look decidedly different than the past 50 years.

Four local players get action for Demand Command

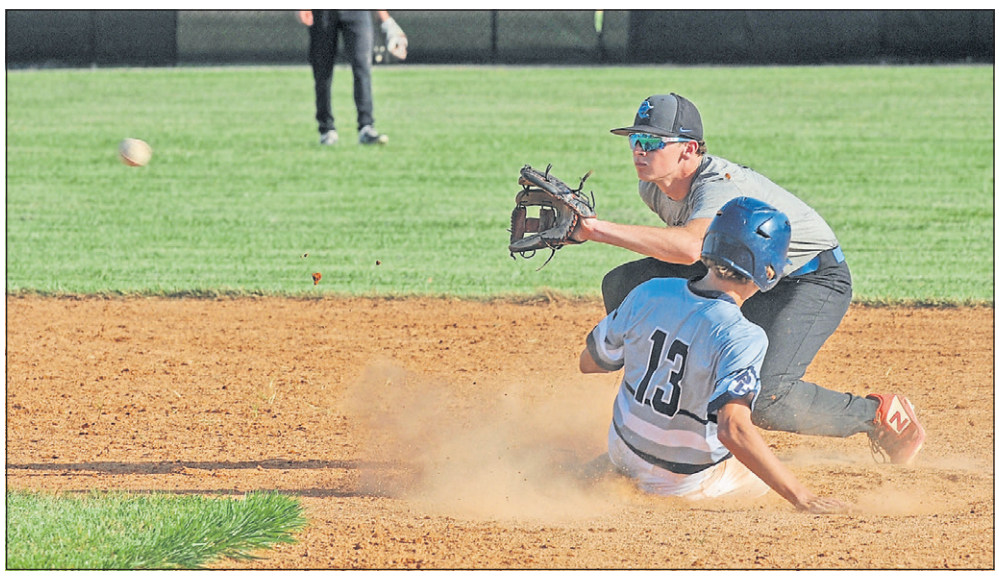
BY THE COURIER STAFF

Four area baseball players got a chance to play close to home when Demand Command, a 16-under team, competed in the Mid-States Tournament in Madison on Thursday.

Demand Command, which is based out of Columbus, battled Powerhouse T3C Aping from Franklin before falling 2-1 in the first game of pool play at Shawe's Post 9 Field.

Demand Command is coached by former Shawe head coach and current Madison assistant coach Matt Forner and features Madison players Craig Demaree, Drew Forner and Zander Vonch, as well as Southwestern's Jordan DeAtley. All four players saw significant action in the game.

Scottsburg's Jacob Martin started on the mound for Demand Command and held Powerhouse at bay until the fifth when a single, a stolen base and a wild pitch led to Powerhouse's first run. The Franklin team added a second crucial run in the sixth on a Justin Zaleski RBI double.



David Campbell

Southwestern junior Jordan DeAtley fields a throw at second base on a stolen base attempt during the 15-U tournament at Shawe on Thursday.

Demand Command loaded the bases in the seventh and scored a run when Drew Bradley of Jasper drew a walk, but couldn't get the equalizer across the plate.

Demaree and Vonch each had a hit for Demand Command which collected seven total in the game while DeAtley and Forner each went 0-for-3. Max Holden of Bloomington North had two hits to lead the team.

Martin went all six innings on the mound, allowing two earned runs on five hits with three strikeouts and six walks to get the loss.

Demand Command played two games on Friday, against Team Indiana Club Garrison and Indiana Prospects 2023, and will play a final pool game on Saturday against J Cards at Hanover College starting at 11:15 a.m.

The tournament features games all over Jefferson County with Madison High School, Madison Junior High School, Hanover College and Shawe High School each hosting games. All four sites will have games all day Saturday with the winners of pool play advancing to the championship tournament on Sunday.

Reds heat up, chip away at Brewers' lead in NL Central

BY MITCH STACY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — The Milwaukee Brewers and Cincinnati start the second half of the season the same way they ended the first — with Nick Castellanos and the Reds hoping to pick up where they left off.

After Castellanos and the resurgent Reds won three out of four in Milwaukee last weekend to pull within four games of the NL Central-leading Brewers, the schedule matches them up again for a three-game set in Cincinnati right after the All-Star break.

In the last two games the Reds scored go-ahead runs in the ninth inning off All-Star closer Josh Hader. Cincinnati's spare-parts bullpen has struggled for much of the season but suddenly looked unbeatable.

The Reds are sizzling in July, winning nine of 11 since dropping a rain-shortened game to the Padres on June 30. Cincinnati won the series finale with San Diego on July 1, swept the Cubs and took two out of three from Kansas City before besting the Brewers.

Eugenio Suarez, hitting just .175, homered to lead off the Reds ninth Saturday night in the 4-3 victory, and Castellanos' two-out hit in ninth drove in two runs in a 3-1 win Sunday.

"The players are stepping up in every way, having fun, enjoying themselves, believing in themselves and having confidence they can do it," Reds manager David Bell said. "It's just been a pleasure being around these guys, watching them go about it this way. You couldn't ask for any more."

Cincinnati's revolving-door staff will get some more arms soon. Right-hander Michael Lorenzen, who has yet to pitch this season because of a shoulder strain, could be activated before Friday's game against the Brewers. Right-hander Jeff Hoffman, who began the season in the starting rotation, also will be available soon.

Tejay Antone and Lucas Sims, two of the top bullpen guys, could return from the injured list by the end of the month.

Jesse Winker (.301) and Castellanos (.331) have been among the major league's top hitters all season and started in the outfield for the National League in Tuesday night's All Star Game. Hustling rookie Jonathan India has become a fixture leading off and playing second base, pacing the team with a .397 on-base percentage.

Joey Votto, the 37-year-old first baseman who missed a month with a fractured thumb, is getting key hits. He singled in the first inning Sunday to drive in the Reds' first run.

"We have to play some really strong baseball the rest of the way," Votto said. "We think we can do that."

The Brewers, who piled up 11 straight wins from June 22 to July 3 to build an eight-game lead over the Reds, have lost six of their last eight since.

Hader was terrific in June, allowing just three hits and no runs and logging eight saves. He got his 21st save in Thursday night's 5-3 win in the opener of the Reds series but wasn't so fortunate on Saturday and Sunday.

Brewers manager Craig Counsell isn't concerned. He knows the long season has ups and downs, and he says Hader will be fine.

"It's been a really good first half, and there's exciting baseball ahead of us," Counsell said. "There's a lot for us to prove."

It starts Friday night in Cincinnati. Pitching matchups for the series haven't been announced yet.

"They're the ones chasing us right now," said Brewers All-Star right-hander Brandon Woodruff, who threw six innings of one-run ball in Sunday's loss. "We played some close games here (in Milwaukee). Seems like they always play us really well here. Hopefully we can come out in the second half and win some ball games at their place and keep it rolling."

Reasonable scoring not for everyone at British Open

BY DOUG FERGUSON
AP GOLF WRITER

Phil Mickelson must have walked off Royal St. George's and wondered what hit him.

The opening round Thursday in the British Open was accommodating enough for 47 players to post scores in the 60s, led by Louis Oosthuizen at 6-under 64.

Phil Mickelson

Mickelson didn't break 80.

He failed to register a single birdie, took double bogey on the final hole and shot 80, his worst start in the 27 times he has played golf's oldest championship.

The good news for Mickelson? He still ends the year as a major champion, having captured the PGA Championship two months ago at age 50.

Mickelson wasn't alone in failing to take advantage.

U.S. Open champion Jon Rahm, trying to become the first player since Tiger Woods in 2000 to win golf's two oldest majors in the same year, hit the face of a fairway bunker on the ninth hole and made a double bogey. Worse yet, he managed only two birdies for a 71.

Bryson DeChambeau couldn't find the fairway and never got any momentum until early in the back nine when he ran off enough birdies to at least salvage a 71.

Both of them played in the morning, before the links began to get drier and a little bouncier. The afternoon played just over 1 1/2 shots harder.

"If I can figure out how to make that driver go straight and figure out the jumpers out of the rough, it would be awesome," DeChambeau said. "I just can't figure it out."

Only five players have broken par over 72 holes at Royal St. George's the last two times it hosted the British Open. The course figures to get drier and tougher for the rest of the week, and the number of players in red figures — 47 — will start shrinking quickly.

But this was the day, morning or afternoon, to make hay.

Justin Thomas couldn't make a birdie. Thomas, who has such great control of the flight of his irons that he would seem to be a natural for links golf, scrambled out of ankle-deep grass for pars and reached 1 under with a birdie on the tough par-4 fourth hole.

He didn't make another birdie the rest of the way, dropped three shots and opened with a 72. That left him in a tie for 91st, along with Patrick Reed.

Rory McIlroy shot 70 and realized it could have been worse.

He began the Open with wedge to 3 feet for birdie. He drilled it down the middle of the next fairway — the ball winds up in the middle more than actually aiming it there — and stuck another wedge in tight. He missed that putt, however.

And then he ran off a string of three straight bogey and was still 2 over with five holes remaining. The frustration began to show, especially on the 17th hole. Another great tee shot, McIlroy had wedge in hand and sent the ball high and soaring to the right, some 50 feet beyond the pin. He had to scramble for par.

A birdie on the last hole gave him hope.

"The conditions got pretty rough there in the middle of the round. The wind got up and I made a few bogeys in a row," McIlroy said. "Sort of said to myself at the turn if I could get back to even par for the day I would be happy.

"To birdie the last hole and get back to even par, yeah, it's nice to finish like that," he said. "Looking forward to getting back out there tomorrow."

It was more challenging in the afternoon, with sustained gusts and the turf starting to get dry. Even though, Webb Simpson was among those who managed a 66 in the afternoon. Former PGA champion Collin Morikawa, in his first test of links golf, had a 67.

Tommy Fleetwood also had a 67.

"First round of the Open, you can only lose it on the first day," Fleetwood said. "It's nice to have shot a good round and get going and move on to tomorrow."

Rahm, Thomas, DeChambeau and anyone else who over par are certainly not out of the tournament. They just failed to take advantage of a day when good scores were available.

Mickelson is another story. He was tied for last place. Only twice in the last 20 years has a player shot 80 in the first round and even made the cut. The most recent was Paul Lawrie in 2013 at Muirfield. Ernie Els opened with an 80 at Royal Birkdale and went on to tie for seventh.

There's one difference, though. Els was among 19 players who shot in the 80s that day (it would have been 21 if Sandy Lyle and Rich Beem had walked in early). On this day, Mickelson shared that space with Deyen Lawson, a local qualifier.

Beal out of Tokyo Olympics for health and safety reasons

BY BRIAN MAHONEY
AP BASKETBALL WRITER

On a U.S. basketball team filled with stars, nobody scored more than Bradley Beal during the season.

At the top of his NBA game, he was finally set to take on the international one.

The coronavirus has wrecked his Olympic dreams.

Beal will miss the Olympics after being placed into health and safety protocols and USA Basketball said Thursday it will replace him on its roster at a later date.

"I'm dying for him," coach Gregg Popovich said. "We all are."

Hours later, the team's exhibition game against Australia scheduled for Friday night in Las Vegas was canceled because of health and safety protocols. USA Basketball cited "an abundance of caution" in making the decision. The U.S. women's game against Australia will be played as scheduled Friday in Las Vegas.

The Americans also announced that forward Jerami Grant has also been placed in health and safety protocols "out of an abundance of caution." Popovich said the Americans didn't expect that his Olympics would be in jeopardy.

It is unclear if Beal has been vaccinated. He had started all three exhibition games for the U.S. so far in Las Vegas, averaging 10.3 points on 10-for-21 shooting.

The Washington Wizards guard was second in the NBA this season with 31.3 points per game. Only Stephen Curry, who passed on the Olympics, averaged more.

U.S. forward Bam Adebayo said he checked on Beal, who told him that he had no symptoms. Still, his news was a tough blow to the players who said they have been following safety recommendations and hoped for good health.

"It still definitely gives you PTSD, somebody catching COVID," Adebayo said. "I remember when I had it, just one of those things I wouldn't wish on anybody."

Beal was expected to play for the Americans two years ago in the Basketball World Cup in China, but had to withdraw from consideration before training camp for family reasons.

He finally had his chance to suit up for the senior national team now and he seemed ready for it.

After scoring just two points in the Americans' loss to Nigeria in their opener, he followed with 12 points against Australia and then had 17 on Tuesday against Argentina in the first U.S. victory.

"Bradley, there's no doubt, he's a huge loss. He was playing every well, understanding everything and fit in well with the group," Popovich said. "So there's no next Bradley Beal."

Beal's NBA team was hit hard by a coronavirus outbreak early in the season and every club had to navigate players going in and out of the lineup because of the strict protocols in place.

Golden State's Draymond Green said it's difficult to see the impact the virus still has after 17 or 18 months and that it's "still costing people the opportunities of a lifetime."

"The experience, the opportunity to represent your country is one that we all dream about growing up," Green said. "So to see that opportunity taken away, you can only sympathize with Brad."

Green added that he hoped Beal would be given a gold medal if the Americans are able to win the tournament for the fourth straight time, because he had made the commitment.

The Americans have already been playing short-handed during their exhibition games, with Khris Middleton and Jrue Holiday of Milwaukee and Devin Booker of Phoenix playing in the NBA Finals.

Popovich said the challenge for the Americans will be finding a player who is in good shape, after the NBA regular season ended in May.

He said they are going through names who are available and trying to see who would be a fit. He added that the Americans wouldn't be able to replace Beal as a scorer and might end up with someone like a utility player in baseball.

The Americans are still scheduled to play Spain on Sunday before heading to Tokyo, with their opening game against France set for July 25.

Time to decentralize college sports, Emmert says

BY RALPH D. RUSSO
AP COLLEGE FOOTBALL WRITER

NCAA President Mark Emmert said Thursday the time is right to consider a decentralized and deregulated version of college sports, shifting power to conferences and campuses and reconsidering how schools are aligned.

Emmert said the recent Supreme Court ruling against the NCAA along with the lifting of restrictions on athletes monetizing their fame should be a catalyst to "rethink" what college sports is about.

In a 30-minute interview with a small group of reporters, Emmert stressed he was not putting forth a mandate or even a recommendation. But he laid out a vision for the future of college sports that puts fewer limitations on athletes and de-emphasizes the role of a national governing body like the NCAA, which was founded 115 years ago and oversees more than 450,000 students who play sports.

"When you have an environment like that it just forces us to think more about what constraints should be put in place ever on college athletes. And it should be the bare minimum," Emmert said.

"When you have an environment like that it just forces us to think more about what constraints should be put in place ever on college athletes. And it should be the bare minimum."

— Mark Emmert
NCAA president

Emmert said the NCAA's more than 1,100 member schools should consider a less homogenous approach to the way sports are governed and re-examine the current three division structure, which includes 355 Division I colleges.

The NCAA's rules and regulations have long been criticized and court challenges have been mounting in recent years.

"We need to be ready to say, 'Yeah, you know, for field hockey, field hockey is different than football. Wrestling is different than lacrosse,' and not get so hung up on having everything be the same," said Emmert, who was president of LSU and the University of Washington before taking the NCAA job in 2010.

Sports serve different functions at different schools, Emmert said, and the NCAA needs to govern in a way that is more reflective of that. He added the NCAA should not shy away from the fact that a small percentage of athletes are using college sports as a path to professional sports.

"We need to embrace that," he said. "And with NIL out there, we're providing other opportunities around this whole notion of using college sports as a career launching pad."

As of July 1, the NCAA waived its longstanding rules prohibiting athletes from earning money off their fame for things such as online endorsements, sponsorship deals and personnel appearances. The move allowed athletes in states that did not have so-called name, image and likeness laws — designed to usurp the NCAA's previous restrictions —- to capitalize similarly to those in states with NIL laws, such as Florida and Georgia.

In states were there are no laws to set NIL guidelines, schools have been instructed to craft their own — a dramatic change for the NCAA. College athletes have jumped into the new market with deals big and small.

The Supreme Court ruling against the NCAA last month was also seen as a bombshell, a 9-0 decision upholding a lower court ruling in an antitrust case related to caps on compensation. Legal experts and college sports observers immediately wondered if the NCAA will look at other approaches as a result.

The types of reforms to college sports governance and structure that Emmert is now advancing are not new. The Knight Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics, for one, has been promoting a plan to revamp Division I and pull major college football out of the NCAA's purview altogether.

Emmert has spoken out against that specific idea, but his comments suggest change is certainly on the table.

"I think this is a really, really propitious moment to sit back and look at a lot of the core assumptions and say, 'You know, if we were going to build college sports again, and in 2020 instead of 1920, what would that look like?' " Emmert said. "What would we change? What would we expect or want to be different in the way we manage it. And this is good. This is the right time."

The NCAA's hands-off approach to NIL reform came after months of work was done on a proposal that created standardized rules across each division and the organization was also hoping for help from Congress in the form of a federal NIL law.

After the Supreme Court ruling threw open the door for more legal challenges to the NCAA's rules, the association pivoted to a hyperlocal approach. The current model creates a patchwork of standards around the country, something college sports leaders insisted would be untenable.

Big 12 Commissioner Bob Bowlsby earlier this week told ESPN the NCAA's NIL solution "was intended to prevent us from getting sued."

Emmert conceded the high court's ruling in the Alston case was a clarifying moment and should motivate college sports leaders to act on reforms.

"You can lean back and do nothing and then just wait and see what happens," Emmert said. "Or you can say, 'Look, we're in it. This is a new era.' We need to take advantage of it, pivot as much as we can toward the areas that I was just talking about and and embrace that change rather than fighting it."

USA Gymnastics in midst of culture shift

BY WILL GRAVES
ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT WORTH, Texas — The U.S. gymnastics championships were over. The pressure — mercifully if only momentarily — gone. On the floor at Dickies Arena, Olympic hopefuls milled about aimlessly. Some talked. Some grabbed their phones. Others searched the stands for their families.

Jordan Chiles did what she usually does when there's a lull in the action. She danced. Soon, a couple joined in. Then a few more. Then a few more. Within a minute or two, nearly the entire group was doing "The Cha Cha Slide" for all the world to see.

Martha Karolyi's program, this is not.

The vibe around the top level of the sport in the United States has loosened in the five years since the highly successful yet highly divisive national team coordinator retired. The impromptu flash mob at national championships last month offered a symbolic if somewhat superficial glimpse at how the landscape is evolving.

"I feel like the trainings are actually kind of a lot more fun and not — I mean, it's still stressful, but it's not as stressful as it used to be," said MyKayla Skinner, an alternate on the 2016 Olympic team who will be one of six American women competing in Tokyo this month.

Still, the greatest gymnast of all time wonders if the pendulum has swung too far, too fast.

Simone Biles has embraced the long-overdue push to create a more athlete-centric environment. Her concern, however, is that the sport's brave new world might make it difficult for the coaches hired to mold prodigies into champions to effectively do their jobs.

"I think the culture shift is happening, but it's almost as if the athletes almost have too much power and the coaches can't get a rein on it," Biles told The Associated Press in May. "So then it's kind of wild. It's like a horse out of the barn: You can't get it back in."

Biles, among the most outspoken critics of USA Gymnastics in the wake of the Larry Nassar sexual abuse scandal and herself a Nassar survivor, is not complaining. It's unlikely she would have returned to the sport in late 2017 if Karolyi was still in charge. Things needed to change.

Yet the 24-year-old is also acutely aware of the pressure that follows when the perennially loaded U.S. team is on the international stage.

The Americans have produced the last four Olympic all-around gold medalists and captured every major team title since the 2011 world championships, a streak they are heavily favored to extend in Tokyo thanks in large part to Biles' unmatched brilliance.

The question is what comes next. How will one of the gold standards of the U.S. Olympic movement foster a healthy, positive climate and a competitive one at the same time?

The two are not mutually exclusive by any stretch. Biles need only point to her relationship with former coach Aimee Boorman and current coaches Laurent and Cecile Landi as proof. Yet she also knows her experience is not exactly commonplace for a sport in the middle of a reckoning.

Gymnastics federations from the U.S. to Great Britain to Australia are grappling with their own version of a #MeToo movement as athletes in each country have come forward to detail a culture they viewed as toxic. Despite measures by leadership to push USA Gymnastics forward, the Nassar fallout isn't going away anytime soon.

Even as Biles and her teammates flew to Tokyo on Wednesday, the Justice Department's inspector general released a long-awaited report that pointed out repeated failures by the FBI to properly investigate Nassar while making sure not to let the organization off the hook.

The air needs to be cleared. It's one of the many reasons why World Champions Centre is awash in floor-to-ceiling windows. There are 36 cameras placed throughout the 50,000 square-foot facility in the northern Houston suburbs, each with the volume turned all the way up.

"Everything needs to be visible, and the coaches know that," said Nellie Biles, who opened the gym to give daughter Simone a place to train. "The coaches know that they are watched at all times, not only from the viewing arena but by cameras. They know that. That should not distract from what they're doing if they're doing their job. They just know that there are cameras and they know that nothing is a secret. So yeah, just do whatever is right and you don't even have to worry that anyone is watching you."

That level of transparency — as necessary as it may be — has created an athlete-coach dynamic that's a marked departure from what Laurent Landi grew up with while training and competing for France in the 1990s.

Baker settles in with Astros in second season in Houston

BY KRISTIE RIEKEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Dusty Baker never felt quite right while navigating his first season as manager of the Houston Astros during last year's pandemic-shortened campaign.

"I felt like a substitute teacher," Baker said.

Now, halfway through his second season in Houston, he has settled in, and the Astros are tied for the second-best record in the American League as they come out of the All-Star break.

"This year I feel like the teacher," he said. "I feel like I'm one of them."

Baker was already playing catch-up in getting to know his team last season before the pandemic hit. He was hired only about two weeks before the start of spring training to replace A.J. Hinch, who was fired after being a suspended by Major League Baseball for a year for his role in the team's sign-stealing scandal.

"We had spring training, I was learning them, they were learning me and then we had the stoppage," Baker said. "Then we had to come back right quick and then we only had 60 games and there wasn't time for that switch to flip."

Baker can't point to a single moment when he began to feel at home with the team. It was more of a gradual progression that was helped by having an entire offseason to check up on his players and get to know them a bit off the field.

The whirlwind of last season not only made it difficult for Baker to settle in, it also made it tougher for the players to really get comfortable with him. Now that they've already played more games than they did all last season, the players are finally getting to get to know their manager.

And they love what they're seeing from Baker.

"He's bringing a lot to the team," All-Star second baseman Jose Altuve said. "Not just his energy, but his commitment to the team, the passion he has about the game, about every player here."

The Astros play Friday night against the Chicago White Sox after going 55-36 before the break. They lead the AL West by 3 1/2 games over second-place Oakland.

Their strong start to this season comes after finishing last year's regular season with a losing record before heating up in October to come within a win of reaching the World Series for the third time in four years.

They have remained one of the top teams in the AL despite starting pitchers Framber Valdez and Jake Odorizzi missing time with injuries and star third baseman Alex Bregman sitting out the last month with a quadriceps strain.

Those injuries come after they lost center fielder George Springer in free agency and ace Justin Verlander to Tommy John surgery this offseason.

Baker likes where the team is, but knows the Astros have a lot more work to do if they hope to contend for a title this season.

"We're pretty good," he said. "My dad would never say great, no matter how well I did. He'd tell me it was pretty good. So ... you can't rest on your laurels or gloat over what you've done, But you can feel proud of it."
